

ABSTRACT

A binary data signal of a very high speed rate travelling over a transport network is regenerated using two threshold levels. The first threshold, or the preset threshold is initially set by the performance monitor, and thereafter adjusted based on the current quality of the signal eye. The second threshold, or the decision threshold, is determined by the performance monitor based on the preset threshold and on the provisioned BER.